

Short Takes By George McClellan

I Told You So!

The deification of Barack Hussein Obama from a mere mortal, as a once happy member of the Chicago United Trinity Church of Christ, founded by America hater Jeremiah Wright, to a divine God carefully steering our ship of state to 'change we can believe in', can be put on hold. The Ship of State has run aground on the shoals of reality and, as the ship sinks, we are seeing the rats (Democrats) abandon its creaking hulk. Obama, as ship's Captain, is unworthy of even being remembered let alone be considered for a second term. People with feet of clay are not entitled to the reverence accorded to such true American heroes as were George Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, et.al. Like Jimmy Carter, Obama will best be remembered as a pitiful example, an inexperienced incompetent, far out of his element and way in deep over his head. But, I told you so!

Many of us were alarmed by the candidacy of Obama as a Presidential contender in early 2008 and said so. We were so concerned by that possibility that many of us bought his books and trudged through the boring, self-serving pages, seeking evidence of his true political beliefs. The books were a treasure trove of Obama's twisted truths now becoming manifest to most Americans. That he believes that Capitalism is evil, and not the best method of spreading the wealth to all who want to try, is there. So is his belief that only through Government, run by elites, can the nation truly be happy with guaranteed equal misery for all. America's legacy of opportunity for all, does not agree with Obama's firm beliefs that those who made it financially, have done so by taking unfair advantage of those who haven't made it and that only through Governments re-distribution of wealth can all Americans truly enjoy their misery equally. Obama believes that America's history has been one of arrogance to, and exploitation of, other countries. That belief is as firmly embedded in his bones as the cold blood that courses through his veins. He does not accept America's exceptionalism.

Obama's failed foreign policy, based upon the two solid pillars of apology and appeasement, have alienated just about everybody, and have alerted our enemies that he is weak, vacillating, indecisive and worse, incompetent. Thomas Jefferson said "weakness invites insult and injury". The continued insults of North Korea and Iran in pursuing nuclear weapons research and technology are like a spit in the eye from those two regimes and demonstrates Jefferson's wisdom and Obama's weakness. Like Jimmy Carter, he hasn't met a dictator he doesn't like.

The rising Islamic Jihadist attacks on Americans, in America, during his first year as President, and relegating them to mere criminal incidents instead of viewing them as acts of war, as well as bringing the 9/11 masterminds to NYC for trial, are criminal in their own right; and telling Americans to "not jump to conclusions", is the meanest form of subterfuge. What other possible conclusion can be arrived at except to conclude that Obama is quite delusional.

As for his administration, consider all the Marxists/Socialists he has appointed as Czar's (Commissars) to oversee what would normally be the functions of Senate approved Cabinet Secretary's. Add to that the tax cheat he has appointed to run our treasury, and immediately one gets that spine tingling sensation that all cannot be right. I once said 'anybody but Clinton!' and while that still remains true, I could never quite shake off the fear that Obama put me in if he in fact became President. Well, he did and that fear is confirmed. See, I told you so!
