An Opportunity to Change Georgia Education

A wonderful opportunity has come our way. Fulton County Public Schools, in a spat or reality, is laying off gross numbers of teachers, doubling down classes, and wondering where more money is going to come from to keep them afloat. I only use Fulton Co. schools simply because their story made its way into the news. Other Georgia Counties are similarly affected. There was no word about laying off the high salaried school administrators, Principals, assistant principals, assistants to the assistant principals, psychologists, disaster therapists, sociologists, aides, contractors, on and on ad nauseum. Theoretically, Georgia does not have teachers' unions but to listen to the teachers' organizations complain, Georgia faces an educational "crisis" that only government can solve. Actually, I don't see it as an educational crisis, merely a needed financial readjustment to solvency and common sense.

But what a splendid opportunity for a Conservative Republican state government to seize control of our state public schools, purge them of the socialist programs of multiculturalism and diversity, remove the overpaid staffs of "piled higher and deeper" educators (PhD's) who contribute nothing to the actual education of children, but only to the longevity of their own little fiefdoms. As conservative voters we must hold our local, as well as federal politicians absolutely accountable for the decisions they make, including toward the school problems.

A realignment of our primary and secondary education systems would immediately include the dumping of "gay" themed classes and text books, a return of contact sports, (I don't mean high school football) teaching boys to be boys and girls to be girls thus nullifying the sissyfication of our future leaders and replace those courses with American history, from the beginning not 1877, Civics, Humanities, the U.S. Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the theories of political leadership a la Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, George Washington, et. al. Teach from original sources not reinterpreted versions introduced into our school systems long, long ago by the Progressives.

Naturally, the Obama administration, which is absolutely oblivious to the wishes of the American people, has budgeted another $100 billion dollars for education, the purpose of which is to create Obama Youth type programs which I explained in my last article. These programs won't be here in Gilmer or surrounding counties for awhile. They will first be developed in the inner cities where the Progressives long ago snatched away all prospects of hope from the citizens there and introduced instead, the debilitating lifestyle of dependency on government which, a smart young black writer, Star Parker, has identified as living on "Uncle Sam's Plantation". Without hope the children in these devastated environments will seek and identify with some sort of family, like a gang. They will seize upon and glorify any leader who promises them "Hope and Change" just like Adolf Hitler did to the youth in the Germany of the early 1930's. Obama is going to provide them that opportunity.

As Star Parker said "It's not complicated. Americans can accept Barack Obama's invitation to move onto the plantation or they can choose personal responsibility and freedom". Not much of a choice as I see it. We have a Progressive created crisis here and no good crisis should go unnoticed. We have an opportunity here for some inspiring conservative politician to step up to the plate and swat a home run. (16 March 10).
