

Short Takes

Well, we're in it now!

Last night the Progressives have at last fulfilled their long cherished dream of socializing America and turning the once most prosperous and self-reliant country in the entire world over to the incompetent forces of "The State". It only remains for the Senate to throw a monkey wrench into the works but somehow I doubt it! It is now around the neck of Congressman Stupak, that the badge of Judas can be confidently hung. Many thought he just might be American enough to resist the impulses to 'go along to get along' but, alas, accepted his miserable little pieces of silver to betray us. Congressman Stupak failed to rise to the level where he could have been enshrined in another chapter of "Profiles in Courage" but instead chose to throw his lot in with the high priests of the temple of Progressive intellectualism, the leaders of the nanny state.

I, and many others, repeatedly warned about Obama and his goals long before his election, and few listened. We said, "read his books" if you don't believe us, and no one did. History tends to repeat itself if we fail to learn from it. Socialism has always been a failure whenever and where ever it has been tried. What makes us think it will succeed here in America? Well, for one thing, we have allowed Progressives to define us (conservatives) and to set the politically correct rules we live by. We have allowed them to go unchallenged when they sought ways to circumvent the Constitution by using the Federal Courts to enact law(s) that would otherwise have been regarded as completely stupid if not in fact unconstitutional. We have allowed them to alter common sense and redefine our basic ideals to fit their twisted meanings. Yes, we let them do it! They have completely infiltrated our schools and universities and suborned our children so that our own homes are now infested by like-minded little socialists ready to report on how the family fails to go along with the progressive program. We let them do it!

Obama believes in centralized power and now, he nearly has it. He may be a one term president but others like him are lining up in the rear ready to assume the mantle of "ruler". Our founding fathers gave us a government that was designed to produce gridlock the very reason being to stop people with ideas like Obama. They recognized that 'democracy' wouldn't work but that a representative republic would and that the machinery of democracy was the vehicle to keep representative government in tow. Obama sees democracy as a dirty process because disagreements between representatives necessarily inhibits his ability to rule. He's a fascist who embodies all the characteristic traits of a fascists and who firmly believes himself to be the embodiment of the collective will, i.e.: multiculturalism and diversity.

Americans do not fit his definition of what he thinks we should be. America is not motivated by a "collective" desire to ensure a utopia for all people. Americans are motivated to be self reliant individuals, keen on supporting their own families and preserving their values and their God given freedoms. That idea stands as an impediment to Obama's vision for America. Obama's rise to power, from community organizer to messianic Chief Executive of the United States, accompanied by his charismatic oratory, his brilliant but toxic mind, his successful efforts to identify and vilify enemies (producers of wealth) have all contributed to his reach for total power. He's almost there. His embrace of a "Victory of Faith" (in government) and his ability to bring about change through his "Triumph of Will" are now almost complete. Well, we're in it now, with both feet. Welcome to the USSA. Go get 'em! (22 Mar 10)
