

The Anti-TEA Party Act of 2010

Will John McCain not simply go away? Does he have to stick around and continue to meddle where his opinion is not needed nor wanted. McCain, as Republican candidate for president, ran an awful campaign where he refused to defend conservatism from Liberal attacks, pleaded for bipartisanship and understanding and trashed his selected running mate, Sarah Palin, when she struck the very nerve of America's very concerned conservative core. For me, John McCain lost badly and his opinion doesn't count any more!

What has John done now? Well, he and his old cohort Joe Lieberman, have jointly introduced a bill titled: "Enemy Belligerent Interrogation, Detention and Prosecution Act of 2010", that requires that anyone, anywhere in the world, including Americans, suspected of terrorist activity or support, can be imprisoned by the US military on the President's authority. Those so arrested would be "unprivileged enemy belligerents". Bush called them "unlawful enemy combatants".

How does this impact us? Well, the sweep of this legislation is so broad that not just those we know to be terrorists (muslims) would be included, but any others identified as having "potential intelligence value" or those deemed a threat "as the President considers appropriate". The "Patriot Act", enacted after the 9/11 attack, was the governments first assault on our liberties as Americans. This bill would completely destroy all existing constitutional safeguards effectively rendering our Bill of Rights absolutely redundant. Might just as well sherd the document.

Included in McCain's bill is a section titled: "Detention Without Trial of Unprivileged Enemy Belligerents". This section permits the continued detention of arrestees until hostilities are over. We can kiss habeas corpus and due process of law good bye. Can you imagine imprisonment without due process? Who would determine just who was an enemy terrorist and make that recommendation to the President? Janet Napolitano, head of Home Land Security? We already know what she thinks of Tea Party Protesters, returned veteran's and any other American with a complaint against government. If this bill passes, then we can expect Obama's SS Police force, melded into the military, to be knocking on doors. Let's call it what it is, the Anti- TEA Party Detention and Prosecution Act of 2010.

RINO Senator Lindsey Graham, of So. Carolina did not join McCain and Lieberman as a co-sponsor. He said he thought it went too far. Instead, he introduced his own bill outlining new procedures for habeas corpus and a new indefinite detention authority. Even the ACLU is alarmed by that one. If either McCain-Lieberman or Graham's bill made it through congress, would PBO sign it. You bet he would, in an instant. One wonders why this legislation is not in the public news right now. We should make inquiries of our politicians about this bill, now.

The United States Congress is desperately in need of an enema to remove the anal blockage that exists there. Arizonans hear me: get rid of John McCain! Give his a bouquet of lovely flowers for his service, a storefront for his library, a pat on the back for his smile and an attaboy for keeping a beautiful wife, then get rid of him. Let's git rid of them all. America simply can't take any more of these stupid professional politicians. Let's have change we really can believe in. Go get 'em! (02 April10)
