

Valid Perceptions

Florida Senator Marco Rubio's recent speech decrying the evils to personal liberty and individual responsibility by the Big Government central planning state, strikes at the heart of what most Americans, the wage earning-tax paying ones, know to be the wrong course to prosperity. Obama (peace be upon him) clearly does not want prosperity for America. He wants socialized commonality for everyone regardless of any individual ability to do better or rise higher or earn more. He argues that what we earn, it is only fair to be redistributed to the moocher, looter and non-producer class, one that is growing in size along with the deficit. Obama (peace be upon him) is engaged in a fight against mankind with an ordered and conscious malevolence.

Our chief office holder is walled into his own temperament, remote, distracted, aloof, and self assured. He has surrounded himself with like minded "experts", educated but not practiced in the skills required to run a company let alone a country. His experts are all intellectuals confined within the high walled prison of their own dogma, knowing every stone but having no concept of the water and mortar that holds the stones together. They advise their master and pontificate to the masses on policy and procedure and do so with rankling fraudulence and a sneering attitude that has quite clearly rubbed the voting public the wrong way. They are possessed of an artificial dignity like chalk drawings on a wall that will soon be wiped away.

It will require another decade of nanny state intrusion into education before the progressives will be able to achieve the level of educated idiots they can expect to keep them in power. Until then we still have a chance to slow it down if not stop it all together. According to Senator Rubio, the last half of the past century has "actually weakened us as a people." His contention is that the American budget and American culture cannot be separated and, that the culture of Big Government has displaced the culture of personal responsibility, a valid perception, surly.

Star Parker, a wonderful black female writer and founder of the Center for Urban Renewal and Education, and author of Uncle Sam's Plantation: How Big Government Enslaves America's Poor and What We Can do About It, points out exactly what government has done to the black community by creating a permanent underclass of fatherless families based upon sexual promiscuity and its attendant hand maidens, crime, poverty and disease.

The urban renewal she looks for is going to be violent and bloody when those folks realized they are hungry, have no money to buy what's available and have no prospects of survival short of becoming predators. New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina, Los Angeles after the Watts Riots, and Detroit too, all stand as perfect examples of the real urban renewal that's coming. When these people are interviewed by the media trying to put a favorable spin on the un-spinable, their comments are all focused on what the government should be doing for them; that it's their right to be supported by others and that they also demand respect. They want all the privileges of civilized living without any of the responsibilities. The entitlement programs of the Federal government creates slaves with unnecessary appetites. The progressive government of Barak (peace be upon him) Obama shows a curious blindness to the importance of their own country and its role in the world. That alone stands as the last depth of justifiable slimness. Remember, freedom is the goal, the Constitution is the way but, bear in mind that freedom is taken, not given. Go get 'em! (6 Sept 2011).
