Short Takes

By George McClellan... Truth in Advertising

The now discredited attempt at Wealth Transfer through Global Warming scheme that the "World Government" is still trying to foist on wealthy nations, is hopefully coming to an end, at least for the moment. They choose to ignore the leaked e-mails that were the instrument of their demise, yet, they prattle on blaming industrial and successful western countries like America as the primary cause of global warming. Wow! The audacity of it boggles the mind. Follow the money.

An important point is ignored in all of this and should be addressed. Because some (apparently many) scientists at the highest level of climate change research have clearly conspired to lie, cheat and steal (research funding) they have, as a result, cast a dark shadow over all scientific claims. Consider for a moment, the vast number of new chemical products in medicines, health care, home cleaning products and chemistry for better living that comes to us daily via television, radio and print ads, all supported by pious "scientific" pronouncements of authenticity claiming the health giving properties of their products they want you to buy are safe, sound and worth the investment. Doctors, or actors dressed up like doctors, pontificate on this or that product to save us from a whole plethora of life threatening diseases and yet we learn that many doctors are actually shills for pill producers and many don't really know if a prescribed medicine is really good for you or not. Most pills are prescribed just to fit a symptom. Follow the money.

I was recently acquainted with an interesting little fact on a long used food product, Oleo Margarine. During World War II, the use of "Oleo", as it was then simply called, was encouraged by the government as a substitute for real butter. I was a little boy and I remember my mother and grand mother making the stuff in a bowl and then pressing it all into a little plastic mold that look suspiciously like a chest of drawers for a child's doll house but was actually the mold that created those rectangles of oleo spread like we know it today. Now, what was the interesting little fact? It is that margarine is actually one molecule away from being plastic. The information further indicated that if one placed a pat of margarine on the floor, insects would avoid it as would cats and most other creatures, dogs, hogs and humans excepted. And, it won't spoil either. It just sits there! Follow the money.

No less an authority then The National Enquirer reports that the primary cause of the jihadist murderer of fourteen people at Fort. Hood, Texas, Major Nidal Hasan, was based upon rejection by a homosexual lover. Well, that's okay then! It couldn't have been his belief in Islam.

Scientists and researchers should soon find themselves relegated to the low levels of trust now experienced by politicians, Enquirer reporters, Al Gore and used car salesmen. People who read rags like the National Enquirer should not, like people on the government dole, have the right to vote. We're in enough trouble as it is.
